Users should verify that the described changes will not impact the performance of the product in their specific applications.

The silicon fabrication process will not change at the additional assembly and test manufacturing site. However, the interconnect material used at the new site will be changed from gold to copper. This change has been fully qualified and will have no impact on the fit or function of the affected part numbers. The form of the parts assembled at the new site will change because of a small modification in the part marking for traceability purposes. The quality, reliability and performance of the TVS diodes assembled at the new site should not change. The production lead times of these TVS diodes should improve gradually as our capacity is expanded. The country of origin will remain the same.

The bottom part marking will be used to identify units produced at the new assembly and test manufacturing site. The bottom marking will include the Work Week (WW) and Lot code (L) in alphabetic characters while the current existing site will use only the top part marking.

Typical Part Marking

Samples from the new additional assembly and test manufacturing site will be available for evaluation upon request on January 9, 2023. As with the addition of any new manufacturing site, Bourns recommends that customers test the affected part numbers assembled at the new site in their specific applications for verification of satisfactory performance.

Implementation dates are as follows:

Date that deliveries of products from the new assembly and test manufacturing location will begin: January 30, 2023

First date code using changes: 2302

Orders for affected part numbers received after January 30, 2023 may be filled interchangeably from the existing assembly and test manufacturing site or the new additional site.
